It now goes to the house for consideration, there with the bill to base draft quotas on the numboils to base draft quotas on the number of registrants in Class 1 instead of on population. The proposal to require training of boys over 19 and under registration was in the form of an amendment by Senator New, and which the senators who favor universal military training as a peace time policy voted against the amendment. As adopted the resolution provides that all male citizens of the United States residing in this country attaining their majority since June 5. thirted States residing in this country attaining their majority since June 5. 1917, shall be subject to registration, under regulations prescribed by the president: shall present themselves for registration on a day proclaimed by the president and thereafter shall be liable to military service. There was no opposition to the resolution itself, the only controversy being over Senator New's amendment. Opponsents of the plan argued that training riself, the only controversy being over Senator New's amendment. Opponents of the plan argued that training youths would hamper urgent army enterprises and take the labor from farms and factories, without providing soldiers for immediate needs at the front. Strong sentiment for universal, compulsory military training was apparent, however, and Friday's votewas not regarded as foreshadowing future action on Senator Chamberlain's universal training bill.
